

MEDICAL SYMPOSIUM

Health Impacts of Oil and Gas Development

Colorado State University, Fort Collins, CO
Friday February 1st, 2019, 8:00 a.m. to 6:00 p.m.

The objective of this medical symposium is to raise awareness and to work with the medical community to understand the nature and scope of potential health effects of Colorado's oil and gas development. We also aim to create a space that will foster networking among medical professionals and researchers around this topic. The symposium is restricted to health and medical professionals, and will be of special interest to practitioners and researchers in the Colorado Front Range area (the region from Denver to the Wyoming border), which includes the densest concentration of oil and gas wells in the United States. This is an invitation-only event, limited to 300 participants. Lunch and a networking happy hour will be included. Event sponsorships are available to support the symposium.
